Speakers

Mr. Jay Blankenship

Is an excellent communicator, activist, author, businessman and a sought after speaker, covering topics including diversity, self esteem, empowerment, black history, business, motivation, community empowerment, education, youth and young adult empowerment. Jay has spoken to thousands of young people motivating them to become leaders and to never give up on their dreams.

In 1992, Jay founded Project Life Foundation, Inc. a youth and young adult community service organization that provides a voice for the youth and young adults, especially members of the African-American and underrepresented minority community. His message inspires youth and young adults to become positive successful citizens through understanding the importance of Education, Politics, and Economics in order to compete and live in a diverse global society. Jay is also a 2003 Clemson University Martin Luther King, Jr. Award Nominee.

Caitlin Malone, Member Delta Sigma Business Fraternity

“You have a great message and I know there were many who needed to hear it from someone other than me”.
Ann Blyth, Westview Middle School

“I want to thank you for the great job you did speaking at our African-American History Month Program and for informing our students of the many and varied contributions made by African-Americans.”

Deborah Jordan, Crescent High School

Dr. Romando James

Is an educator, author, poet, and a highly sought after speaker. He is undoubtedly an entertaining speaker who makes one want to feel good about him/herself without limitations of skepticism of their potential to become whoever they want. Dr. James is an International Poet Fellow and a Jefferson Award winner for community.

In 1991, Dr. James founded P.R.I.D.E. and Operation Common Sense. The mission of P.R.I.D.E. is to develop ideal characteristics and values in males, especially African-American males that will enhance self esteem and promote productivity. The mission of Operation Common Sense is to provide educational, health education and leadership services to the youth, young adults and senior adults of the community.
